

Adopted

COVER: Lisa Waup
oneness 2022, work in progress
BACK COVER: Peter Waples-Crowe
studio detail
ABOVE: Weniki Hensch Blueprint 2022

Adopted

—

Weniki Hensch
Ebony Hickey
Peter Waples-Crowe
Lisa Waup

An exhibition at The Dax Centre, co-curated by the artists & Jonathan Crowther

THE DAX CENTRE

THE DAX CENTRE

Published by
The Dax Centre

30 Royal Parade
Kenneth Myer Building
University of Melbourne
Parkville Vic 3010

daxcentre.org

—

The Dax Centre Team
Jonathan Crowther:
Curator & Collections Manager
Stef Harris: Gallery Manager
Anubhav Dhingra: Mental Health Program Coordinator

—

Design: Liz Cox, studiomono.co
Photography: Peter Tarasiuk
Copyediting & proofreading:
Clare Williamson
Printer: Ellikon
Edition: TBC
ISBN: 978-0-646-86616-1

Acknowledgement of Country

We would like to acknowledge the Wurundjeri People of the Kulin Nation who are the traditional custodians of the land on which The Dax Centre stands.

We would also like to pay our respects to their Elders past and present and extend this respect to all Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander First Nations peoples.

Ebony Hickey working in the studio

ADOPTED

THE DAX CENTRE

Lisa Waup
oneness 2022
Work in progress at Spacecraft

CONTENTS

7	Foreword / Jonathan Crowther
9	Adopted / Dr Kirsten Lyttle
—
16	Peter Waples-Crowe
20	Lisa Waup
24	Weniki Hensch
28	Ebony Hickey
—
32	Acknowledgements

ADOPTED

THE DAX CENTRE

Peter Waples-Crowe
studio detail

SANE's The Dax Centre is dedicated to hearing the voices of those with lived experience of mental health issues and psychological trauma. It is through this work that we believe we can educate the public and reduce stigma around these issues. This often means we hear and are privy to very personal stories, ones that are not easy to tell, and not always easy to hear.

The stories in Adopted are no exception. Adopted is an exhibition that deals with complex personal issues and experiences, and I thank and commend the artists for their work.

We are grateful to the City of Melbourne for their support of this exhibition through their Arts and Creative Investment Partnership program. Their commitment to diversity and inclusion is akin to our own.

And now, most importantly, I would like to do what The Dax Centre does best, and let those with the lived experience speak.

—

Jonathan Crowther / Curator & Collections Manager, The Dax Centre

Weniki Hensch
working in the studio

THE DAX CENTRE

Adoption is a heavily loaded and contested practice in contemporary Australia. Speaking broadly, adoption is the legal process and legal transfer of a child from their birth family (or legal guardian) into the care of the adoptive parent(s).<sup>1</sup> Language around adoption is, at times, clumsy and dated, and is unable to encompass the range of emotions and experiences of those affected by adoption. It should be no surprise that there is no singular, homogeneous or common experience of adoption. This is echoed by the auto-ethnographic narratives expressed in the artwork of the four artists in this exhibition: Peter Waples-Crowe, Lisa Waup, Ebony Hickey and Weniki Hensch.

In the work of these artists, a range of complex narratives emerge: of marginalisation – at times, a double marginalisation, such as being queer and Aboriginal, as seen in the works of respected Indigenous queer Elder Peter Waples-Crowe – or of the ongoing challenge in piecing together Lost, Stolen and Hidden intergenerational stories that have been intentionally and forcibly silenced through the processes of colonisation,<sup>2</sup> such as in the work of mixed cultural and First Peoples multidisciplinary artist, curator and mother Lisa Waup. Stories of connecting to culture through investigating mediums and ancestral objects within institutional collections are explored in the work of Papua New Guinean-born multidisciplinary artist Weniki Hensch. Using poetry, performance, drawing and video, Haitian-born Australian contemporary artist Ebony Hickey, and her alter ego Koko Mass, playfully explores the blatant and subtle racism, the macro and micro aggressions that she experiences as a queer, black, intercountry adoptee, while celebrating and reclaiming her own DNA. While some experiences of adoption are positive and some are negative, adoption is inevitably intertwined with deep emotions for all those concerned.

Adopted as a baby and placed into a white family, Peter Waples-Crowe's journey of connection to his Ngarigo ancestors, family and culture is one that has been interrupted, delayed and ultimately celebrated. He is well known for using his chosen totem of the alpine dingo (Ngarigo Country is the Snowy Mountains) and utilising text in English and Ngarigu to reclaim and reinscribe homophobic and racial slurs. He has been gifted the name Ngurran from his tribe, which means the emu – the male of whom, in a display of sacrifice (and challenging heteronormative gender roles), incubates the eggs, spending weeks without food or drink before doing sole parent duty and raising the chicks for the next year and a half.<sup>3</sup> In this exhibition Waples-Crowe's work tells the story of his journey to this name.

Lisa Waup was adopted at birth by her close-knit Australian-Italian family, who gave her unconditional love and a strong sense of family. When she was a teenager, her adopted mother helped her look for information about her birth family. Like many adoptees, much of Lisa Waup's adoption history has been uncovered from within government records and paperwork. Following her own history and that of her family through government and institutional records, she discovered that her birth mother had been put into homes at a very young age and that her great-grandmother was part of the Stolen Generations.<sup>4</sup> This legacy of colonialism – of Lost, Stolen and Hidden Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander children and family – is one that continues to cause intergenerational trauma for the lives of Indigenous Australians, as cultural, spiritual and family ties were forcibly severed.

'The Stolen Generations' refers to the thousands of Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander children who were forcibly removed from their families, communities and Country by the hands of governments, churches and welfare bodies to be raised in institutions, fostered out or adopted by non-Indigenous families, nationally and internationally.<sup>5</sup> Sometimes, information was intentionally hidden as a strategy for survival. 'The Hidden Generations'<sup>6</sup> refers to generations of Indigenous Australians who hid their children's identities as a form of survivalist strategy from the colonial processes that forcibly removed Indigenous children from their families. According to the Australian Bureau of Statistics, around 1 in 10, or 11%, of all Indigenous Australians born before 1972 reported being removed from their families,<sup>7</sup> while the Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies (AIATSIS) estimates that this number may be as many as 1 in 3.<sup>8</sup> Making art has enabled Waup to trace, unearth, connect and express her cultural history and ancestral ties to make pathways through a fractured, and at times missing, family history.

Historically, adoption has been viewed as an act of humanitarianism; a solution to the social issues of infertility and the so-called 'shame' of illegitimacy. It has been seen as saving children from poverty and need, while simultaneously offering adoptive parents the blessing of raising children 'as their own'. The past practices of forced family separation reflected the idea of a 'clean break': where a mother and her child were separated as early and as completely as possible, in a misplaced attempt to mitigate grief. 'Forced adoption', or 'forced family separation', describes the practice where pregnant unwed women (and their partners) were subjected to unauthorised or illegal separation from their children – whether or not the children were subsequently adopted (many spent considerable time in children's homes or other out-of-home care).<sup>9</sup>

Recently, a more complex picture of adoption has emerged – one in which past adoption practices and processes are seen as unethical, immoral, and often illegal. This change in perspective is largely due to the testimonies of those who have experienced the ongoing pain, suffering and trauma that many adoptions have caused. In 2013, then Prime Minister Julia Gillard gave a national apology to victims of forced adoption practices.<sup>10</sup> Narratives from unwed mothers of pressure, manipulation, coercion, dishonesty, lack of willing or informed consent, abuse and administration of drugs against their will are among some of the common experiences mentioned. The practice of 'closed adoption' resulted in many adopted people being unaware of their origins, often only finding out as adults, and in traumatic circumstances.<sup>11</sup> Unfortunately, forced adoptions, or 'forced family separations', were commonplace in Australia from the late 1950s to the 1970s. At their peak, in 1971-72, there were around 10,000 forced adoptions in Australia.<sup>12</sup>

Today, in Australia the number of adopted children is considerably lower. In 2020-21, a total of 264 adoptions were finalised (the lowest number on record), and the majority (69%) were 'known child adoption';<sup>13</sup> this is where the child and adoptive parents knew each other before adoption. Only 42 of the 264 adoptions finalised were intercountry adoptions. Generally, 'intercountry adoption' describes the adoption of a child/children from countries other than Australia, through one of Australia's official intercountry adoption programs. Although the impacts of COVID-19 may have contributed to the low number of intercountry adoptions finalised (meaning an adoption order had been completed by an Australian court), there have been steadily declining numbers of this type of adoption.<sup>14</sup> It is important to note that Gillard's National Apology for forced adoptions did not include those affected by intercountry adoption.<sup>15</sup>

Ebony Hickey and Weniki Hensch were both born outside of Australia, although only Hickey's adoption was finalised in Australia through the intercountry adoption process. It has been said of intercountry adoption that 'a global child welfare intervention was born out of disaster'.<sup>16</sup> While advocates argue for a less bureaucratic and simpler adoption process, adopting a child from another country should be difficult – intercountry adoption faces multiple ethical problems. The most obvious is the prevention of the international trafficking of children; children should not be smuggled, sold or bought. Adoptive parents should not have saviour complexes. Delving deeper, there is a power imbalance embedded in the practice of intercountry adoption. As Cuthbert et al. explain: 'Intercountry adoption has always taken place in the shadow of the colonial past and of present inequalities of wealth and power. Why do parents choose to adopt a child from another country, another culture, another race? How do they address the challenges of raising such a child and deal with issues of identity that cross national boundaries?'<sup>17</sup> Ebony Hickey's powerful video artwork Divine Make-up speaks to the complexities and of her lived experience as an intercountry adoptee - as she attempts to 'shake loose' her trauma and abandonment, and ultimately reclaim her sense of self through her art.

Weniki Hensch's practice draws upon ancestral knowledge found through cultural objects, materials and spirituality, while looking ahead to future generations. Since the birth of her daughter, she felt compelled to delve deeper into her adoption story. Born in Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea (PNG), she was adopted by Caucasian parents and raised with blonde, Germanic-looking siblings (her adoptive father is German, her adoptive mother is English). At the age of 19, her search for and later reunion with her birth mother brought her back to PNG. A year later, Hensch had her own child. Researching and handling cultural objects from the Oro Province, where her birth mother is from, has had a profound impact on her practice. Working with PNG collections at the Museum and Art Gallery of the Northern Territory, Melbourne Museum and the National Gallery of Victoria has led to an ongoing investigation of mediums, practices and languages and a greater understanding of her ancestral bloodlines.

The artworks in this exhibition show the vast and complicated multitude of layers, identities and narratives found within the experience of adoption. In this essay, I have attempted to unpack some of the issues as evidenced in the artwork and lived experiences of the artists involved. On a personal note, I have found this essay very difficult to write - I, too, am an adoptee - adopted in Sydney, New South Wales, in 1972 at The Mater Misericordiae Hospital for Women and Children, Royal North Shore Hospital. 'The Mater' was run by the Sisters of Mercy and was a maternity hospital established to care for mothers who were 'unmarried, and destitute before and after the birth of their babies. Babies for adoption were also placed from the Mater.'<sup>18</sup> My birth mother came to Australia alone at the age of 21. Her single-fare airline ticket had been paid for by my birth father. This anecdotal information was handwritten by the social worker on one of the government-issued forms. The phrase 'Infant for adoption' is stamped repeatedly in upper-case black letters over my birth medical records and adoption papers. The language and comments throughout these documents are brief, subjective and judgemental. Many of these comments reflect the attitudes, practices and language of Australia at that time. My birth mother's ethnic group is written as a fraction. Māori is misspelt as 'Mairi'. A mixed-race child in 1972 in the state of New South Wales was considered to be a child with a disability or special needs. In the year of my birth, adoptions in New South Wales peaked at their highest recorded rate in Australia's history.<sup>19</sup> Since that time, adoption rates have consistently fallen. This is in part due to the introduction of the Supporting Mother's Benefit (1973), greater availability of the contraceptive pill (from 1972), the decriminalisation of abortion (South Australia was the last state to do so in 2019) and advancements in women's rights. While adoption practices in Australia have undergone change since the 1970s the impacts of adoptions are still deeply felt – psychologically, emotionally, spiritually and intergenerationally.

Dr Kirsten Lyttle / 25 July 2022

-
1. Denise Cuthbert, Shurlee Swain and Marian Quartly, 2013, The Market in Babies: Stories of Australian Adoption, Monash University Publishing, Sydney, accessed 23 July 2022, ProQuest Ebook Central, p. 14.
  2. D. Hromek, 2019, The (Re)Indigenisation of Space: Weaving Narratives of Resistance to Embed Nura [Country] in Design (Doctoral thesis), University of Technology Sydney, accessed 24 July 2022, <https://opus.lib.uts.edu.au/handle/10453/137126>, p. xiv.
  3. Janet Parker, 'Emu Chicks Emerging', ABC Science, published 1 August 2000, accessed 24 July 2022, <https://www.abc.net.au/science/articles/2000/08/01/2689167.htm>.
  4. Kath Dolan, 'Lisa Waup: Baluk Arts', Kath Dolan Interview Series 2021, accessed 24 July 2022, <https://kathdolan.com.au/work/lisa-waup-artist-curator-baluk-arts-programs-coordinator/>.
  5. The Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies (AIATSIS), 'The Stolen Generations', para 1, accessed 24 July 2022, <https://aiatsis.gov.au/explore/stolen-generations>.
  6. Claire G. Coleman, 'Hidden in Plain Sight', Meanjin 79, no. 2 (2020): 58–61, <https://search.informit.org/doi/10.3316/informit.228179384654369>.
  7. Australian Institute of Health and Welfare, 'Media Release: New Report Shows Long-term Disadvantage for Australia's Stolen Generations', para 3, published 15 August 2018, accessed 24 July 2022, <https://www.aihw.gov.au/news-media/media-releases/2018/august/new-report-shows-long-term-disadvantage-for-austra>.
  8. The Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies (AIATSIS), 'The Stolen Generations', para 3, accessed 24 July 2022, <https://aiatsis.gov.au/explore/stolen-generations>.

9. Australian Institute of Family Studies, 2022, Daryl Higgins, Pauline Kenny and Sam Morley, 'Forced Adoption National Practice Principles', 'Explanation of key terms: Forced adoption, Forced family separation', paras 2 & 3, published April 2016, accessed 23 July 2022, <https://aifs.gov.au/research/research-reports/forced-adoption-national-practice-principles>.
10. Gillard Office (GO), 'Speeches: National Apology for Forced Adoptions', Julia Gillard, published 21 March 2013, accessed 23 July 2022, <https://www.juliagillard.com.au/national-apology-for-forced-adoptions/>.
11. For further information about the history and experiences of forced adoption, see: Department of Social Services, 'Forced Adoptions in Australia: History and Experiences of Forced Adoption – Fact Sheet', updated 24 July 2019, accessed 23 July 2022, https://www.dss.gov.au/sites/default/files/documents/07\_2019/fact-sheet-history-and-experiences-forced-adoption.pdf.
12. Australian Institute of Family Studies, 2022, Daryl Higgins, Pauline Kenny and Sam Morley, 'Forced Adoption National Practice Principles', 'A history of forced adoption', para 1, published April 2016, accessed 23 July 2022, <https://aifs.gov.au/research/research-reports/forced-adoption-national-practice-principles>.
13. Australian Institute of Health and Welfare, 2022, Adoptions: Snapshot, 'Types of adoption', para 2, published 3 December 2021, accessed 23 July 2022, <https://www.aihw.gov.au/reports/australias-welfare/adoptions>.
14. Australian Institute of Health and Welfare, 2022, 'Adoptions Australia 2020–2021: Media Release', published 3 December 2021, accessed 23 July 2022, <https://www.aihw.gov.au/news-media/media-releases/2021-1/december/number-of-adoptions-in-australia-lowest-since-aihw>.
15. Cuthbert et al., The Market in Babies: Stories of Australian Adoption, p. 81.
16. Ibid., p. 95.
17. Ibid., p. 97.
18. Find & Connect, 2021, 'Mater Misericordiae Hospital (1906–1982)', Find & Connect Web Resource Project for the Commonwealth of Australia (2011), para 1, first published 2011, updated 9 November 2021, accessed 23 July 2022, <https://www.findandconnect.gov.au/guide/nsw/NE00448>.
19. Australian Institute of Family Studies, 2012, Daryl Higgins, 'Research Snapshot: Past and Present Adoptions in Australia: History of Adoption', para 2, accessed 23 July 2022, <https://aifs.gov.au/research/research-snapshots/past-and-present-adoptions-australia>.

Lisa Waup
oneness 2022
work in progress

ADOPTED

Ngurrn. A tribal name given to me as an adult. I was adopted. Loved.
Go easy on me. I worked so hard. Loving.
Under the bridge. Take away. Binary. Loved it.
Run,
Run. Homophobia. Poofster bashers. Stop beating myself up. Resist. Self-love.
Always on my mind. Annie. Gatekeepers. Grief. Wild dog. Lovers.
Ngaya Ngarigo. Elders. Whole. Love.

Work in progress, paper collage on canvas

Peter uses found materials to create his text-based collages.

RIGHT: Peter in his studio

OPPOSITE: Studio iconography

ADOPTED

Lisa screenprinting at Spacecraft

I was given up for adoption at birth, adopted into a family that has unconditionally loved me all my life. I would not be where I am today if it wasn't for my mum, dad and brother – especially my mum. My parents are Australian-Italian. Italians are extremely family-orientated people – everything revolves around the family. I have learnt this and carried this all my life – my art practice is pinned around family, Country, tracing lost history and identity wrapped in storytelling. My art has given me a place to be able to process and to express my life's path – one that was altered at birth. It has been a long road, and it will be a lifelong process for me to find Lost, Stolen and Hidden family through my Mama (birth mother). I feel that I too am honouring her words with the connections I have been given about my family and history, and my ability to express this visually. I feel through my birth I have broken a past cycle of Lost, Stolen and Hidden children/family – I have learnt to hold on a little tighter to my children, to dedicate my life to them, for them to realise how special they are – a learnt precious tool from my mum. oneness details the many aspects of who I am, oneness is centred around identity – where I belong, where I long to belong. oneness translates to a state of being unified or whole, comprising two or more parts. The series of prints at times appear fractured in their appearance. This highlights multiple core feelings an adopted child/person can feel through their life. This series of work is solely focusing on IDENTITY – something that I grapple with regularly, at times not quite belonging in either of my worlds. The process of adoption is a lifelong one. I am fortunate that I now have two mothers, thankful for the love and energy both have given me over my lifetime. It has made me a better mother to my three beautiful children and a more compassionate woman, with a hope that in sharing my story, others can see and hear it and find strength and solidarity.

LEFT: Lisa bases her screenprints on original drawings in ink on paper.

BELOW: Washing off the exposed emulsion

The beginning of the prints for oneness

Weniki forming her clay work at The Wheelhouse Studio

Writing this text for this residency has been an interesting rollercoaster of emotions. Each time I dive back into my adoption journey, the immersion experience is progressively different. My personal evolution creates the lens through which I view my adoption journey. It is an experience that continues to organically morph and mould new layers of understanding, forgiveness and active shedding of the things that I cannot change. Transmuting the vulnerable and shining a light on the unknown parts of myself. Finding peace and fire in what I can create.

The adoption journey is a continued personal state of mystery and investigation. Multilayered. Multifaceted. Personal reflections on whether these elements of myself are learned, conditioned or a survival response.

The adoption experience has no handbook. Yes, there are some common threads, but the personal lens of experience will always lead to an individual journey.

Growing up as a brown child in a Caucasian family through intercountry adoption, I was always expected to share my adoption background and experience from a very early age, to any given stranger at any given time. A standard day-to-day response to constantly explain my place within the family unit.

But through time and peace, moving forward, depending on the day and situation, I now keep it as a discreet part of my journey. Thankfully reclaiming my boundaries and respect for my own story. I focus on the re-parenting of myself and how I can actively instigate change and healing through creating a hybrid of connecting to my own Country, my own Culture and Self. For myself and my future lineage.

My art practice continues to be an intuitive and cathartic journey, an investigation of mediums and how they have been able to translate and transmute the layers of where I have wanted to immerse in the unpeeling of myself and my story.

ABOVE: Weniki at
The Wheelhouse Studio

CENTRE: A selection of Weniki's materials and sources of inspiration

BELOW: Work in progress,
laser-cut moulded perspex

My right as an infant did not matter. I became a product of the rich and white.

shake loose my trauma,
Stillborn goddess!
Love is still bound by the naked womb,
drowned by the bloodless soul
Come and grasp I,
middle identity the grace has vanished
Let me fly into myself,
shower out my belongings,
for I am no greater than I myself perceive my eye,
ancient beating drum,
holding forth one question!
For I am an abandoned adopted child soul map out the hidden sense of soul, direction to the sensation,
waiting to find the pin drop,
Guide my enslaved DNA
D - divine make-up from my ancestors' drum
N - Niggers, Negroes, Blacks, who built countries while enslaved, there was a slave trade here in the land down under
A - I am here despite world history and self-struggle!
Not here to teach, Here to strive, limitations are there and can be broken, the path is starting to be paved, and foundations built!
Why is there so much same, same everywhere I look Do you see someone that looks like you - same hair, skin colour? Does it give you the power to speak, do people understand your point of view?
look at yourselves, to your left, to your right and behind you.
What's diversity?
angry and hungry at the same time
Powerful I am and ready to show my flex, to the untouchable full strength.
Looking for no stop sign, no longer feeding off the pain and trauma vow to un-baptise self, do not react to self-triggers or dumb conformative shit never seen a human with the same blood running through me running through them
Black commodification is a billion-dollar industry and I am a product of that money,
Changing hands for adoption. taken from my homeland of Haiti to be here and now
I'm about to tailor this game.
My art is the connection to my DNA
I don't know my blood mother, father or grandparents,
I don't know what my mother looks like,
I don't know my mother's name.
my mouth has never felt the pronunciation of what it is like to say her name!

Ebony working with paint pens on perspex

BELOW LEFT: Studio and sketchbook detail

BELOW RIGHT: Ebony uses text as an element in her work.

In Ebony's studio

Acknowledgements

The Dax Centre would like to thank all those who made this exhibition and public programming possible. The generous funding from the City of Melbourne, through their Arts and Creative Investment Partnership program, gave us a stable foundation from which to build this complex and compelling exhibition. We thank the amazing artists, who have courageously confronted and found their way through personal subject matter to deliver important and powerful artworks.

The introductory essay by Dr Kirsten Lyttle, in which she shares her own lived experience of adoption, gives us insight into why adoption is such a difficult topic to address. We thank her for her words and elucidation of each artist's practice.

Finally, we would like to thank photographer Peter Tarasiuk, catalogue designer Liz Cox, and copyeditor Clare Williamson, as well as the hardworking team of staff members and volunteers here at The Dax Centre.

The Dax Centre provides artists with lived experience of mental health issues opportunities for creative expression while fostering social change by expanding the public's awareness of mental illness and breaking down stigma through art. www.daxcentre.org

SANE is the leading national mental health organisation for people with complex mental health issues in Australia and for the families and friends that support them. www.sane.org

